By Seymour M. Hersh neth Genmill, Mr. Rebozo's attorney, a step that Mr. Lenzner depicted as, "to say the least, unusual.'

Because of such steps, one closely involved source said that the investigators now believe that "there's no question that every-thing in connection with Bebe has been coordinated by the White House from the beginning and it's still going on." One piece of evidence the source said, is a letter written last Oct. 18 by Role Mary Woods. Mr. Nixon'e secretary, to John Bartlett, a revenue service in-vestigator from Orlando, Fla., who was assigned to the inquiry. Mr. Rebozo and President Nixon have publicly said that the $100,000 in cash was kept untouched in a safe-deposit box until it was returned to the Hughes Corp. last June 27, about two months after the IRS began its inquiry. Mr. Reboz- has also said that he told Miss Woods, but not the President, of the con-tribution before the 1972 election. The Times's source- said, how-ever, that Mr. Reboso told Mr. Bartlett of his conversation with Miss Woods about the cash in the late spring of 1973. Instead of directly asking Miss Woods to confirm Mr. Rebozo's recollection. the sources said, Mr. Bartlett asked Mr. Rebozo's attorneys to arrange for a response from Miss Wods through the White House.

A copy of Miss Woods's response to Mr. Bartlett was made available to The Times. In it, Miss Woods confirmed that she had a conversation with Mr. Rebozo about a campaign contribution "delivered to him by Mr. Dan-ner," Mr. Rebozo has said that the cash was brought to him by Richard G. Danner, a Hughes employee. The letter goes on to note that:

"Mr. Rebozo told me that he had put this campaign contribution in a safety-deposit box and further that he had given hi, attorney instructions in the event of his death that he should open the box and follow the instructions therein. It was my understandiog that those instructions were to deliver the cootents to the campaign chairman or finance chairman of the next campaign, would further like to state that at no time did I ever discuss this matter with any other individual." The Times's sources said that the Senate investigators were critical of Miss Woods's letter, noting that it did not mention the specific amount of the contribu-tion—$100,000—oor did it ac-knowledge that the funds stemmed directly from Mr. Hughes. Miss Woods also noted in her letter that "I regret to say I do not recall the date or time of this conversation [with Mr. Re-

Mr. Bartlett appareotly concluded that aspect of his inquiry after receipt of the letter, the sources said. They also pointed out that Mr. Rebozo has told newsmen that he was informed by the IRS in late July, 1973, three months before Miss Woods's letter to Mr. Bartlettthat he had been cleared of any wrongdoing in connection with his handling of the cash.

During interviews with Miss Woods, the sources said, the Senate investigators learned that her response to Mr. Bartlett had been drafted by Mr. Buzhardt and signed by her.

Dr. Hajime Tominaga, the chief of the neuropsychiatric clinic at tire hespital, and two of his associates, Dr. Motoo Linka and Dr. Yoichiro Orihashi, agreed that the most important attribute that Mr. Onoda and Mr. Yokoi had in common was an intangible one: the will to survive. They pointed out in an inter-view that the lieutenant and the sergeant had had vastly different training. Mr. Onoda was an officer who had received the most gence gathering and guerrilla war-fare. Mr. Yokoi, in contrast, was a drafted soldier who had been given only routine military train-

GENOA, April 23 (Reuters).—Eidnapped prosecutor Mario Sossi today asked the authorities to call off a police hunt for him, saying it was useless and dangerous. Mr. Sossi, 42, the deputy public prosecutor of Genoa, was abducted by five men here last Thursday. His kidnappers are believed to be members of the extreme leftist Red Brigades organization.

The abduction victim asked authorities to end the hunt in a handwritten letter found by police in the hallway of a house after an anonymous call to a local newspaper. Photo of Bruises

Along with letters to his family and to one of his colleagues. police found a photograph of Mr. Sossi with dark bruises on his left cheekbone and over his right eye.

The kidnapping, the latest in a series over the past year, has caused indignation among politicians and the press, President Giovanni Leone lest night sharply condemned the abduction as an attack against the country's democratic system. Mr. Sossi, who is disliked by radicals because of his prosecution of extremists, sald in his brief note to the acting Genoa prosecutor: "I ask you . . . to order the immediate suspension of the search, which is useless and dangerous."

Ford Says Cut In Taxes Would Fuel Inflation

NEW YORK April 23 (NYT).
--Vice-President Ford said Jesterday that he opposes "a quickie, quick-fix tax cut" urged by lead-ing Democrats in Congress. He said it would add to the fuel of inflation."

The Vtce-President told 1,300 editors and publishers at the an-nual luncheon of the Associated Press here that he believes Congress should pass legislation au-thorizing the use of wage and price controls over certain parts of the economy for the next 12 or 18 months.

This, he said, "would give flex-ibility to the President" and "give him the opportunity to focus in on some of the areas where we've had our greatest problems." Thus far, he noted, the chances for such legislation appear doubtful, and "without acy tools, the administration will have no real weapon to do t me-thing affirmatively about wages or prices."

Mr. Ford reaffirmed that "I have no intention of being a candidate for any political office in 1976." He said, "The job that the President asked that I to involves trying to negotiate some differences between the White House and the Congress. The minute that I would become interested in frunning in 1976), whatever credibility I have in this negotiating process goes down the drain."

The acceptance of the invioof 10 principles to be adopted by the European Conference on Security and Cooperation was described by Pravda as having

"exceptional significance."
"Without exaggeration one can say that peace in Europe is based upon it. just as genuine détente is based upon its unconditional recognition." said the Communist party newspaper, emphasizing the seriousness with which Moscow regards the assue.

The tentative accord was reached on the eve of the Easter break, It was the most important advance made by the conference since it began its negotiating

By Edward Cowan

WASHINGTON, April 23 iNYT:—A scientific group that has been critical of nuclear power has accused the Atomic Energy Commission of a cover-up of in-formation about the feasibility of converting sunshine into commercially useful energy.

The Scientists' Institute for Public Information and its chairman, Dr. Barry Commoner, contend that the AEC has played down the prospect of solar energy in order to make nuclear reactors seem more promising. But, they say, there are tremendous uncertainties about reactor power, especially the economics and safety of the proposed breeder reactor that the agency contemplates making the workhorse of the electric-utility industry hy the end of the century.

Or. Commoner has accused the AEC of giving the public "mis-leading information" about the potential of solar energy by sketching too pessimistic a pic-ture and by suppressing an optimistle report on the subject.

John Harris jr., director of the AFC's information services, emphatically denied that the agency had suppressed information about solar energy. He said that the report was avallable at the agency's public reference room in downtown Washington.

Another Bloc Is Heard From

With the current wave of meetings, or calls for meetings, of this, that and the other collection of nations, and interests, it is not Eurorising that the Soviet Union should be more insistent on the need for a world Communist conference. If no other reason is apparent, there is always the hope hy Moscow to refute Peking's assertion that the Once-unified Marxist-Leninist movement has dissolved into an aggregation of jarring ideologies and nationalisms.

This charge, and the facts that lie hehind tt, are more important to Communists than the equally fragmented state of what once was called the "free world," because the latter was always composed of diverse products of political evolution, adhering to no single credo and without the organization that the successive Communist internationals provided. Communist theory always includes the "workers of the world," and after World War II the military power of the Soviet Union, as well as the prestige of its victories over Nazism, gave centralized leadership to the Kremlin.

Since Stalin's death, the rise of national apirlt and concern for national interests have intensified throughout the Communist world, and it is patent enough that Moscow's writ no longer runs through moch of it, that Soviet doctrine competes with Maoism in many areas, and that the days when a word from the Kremlin could upset a Communist government, or change the whole structure of a Communist party in a non-Communist country, are long past.

Nevertheless there is not only a Soviet bloc, in which Moscow's influence predominates, but a looser Communist bloc, comprising countries and parties that do not necessarily accept the ukases of the Kremlin as the last word, but which will cooperate -up to a point. And in the shifting world economic and political scenes, it makes sense, certainly from the Communist standpoint, to find out how far that cooperation will extend and what concrete measures the collective movement can take.

This is by no means necessarily either a strategic necessity, nor a revolutionary tactic. The kind of meetings that the industrialized West, with its particular trading patterns, or the raw-material producing countries, with their aspirations and needs, have been holding or seeking would have parallels among the Communist countries. which have their own methods and objectives in international commerce. That the sort of gathering sought by the Kremlin and a number of other Communist headquarters would have other aims than the simply economic, and that it would produce a different kind of rhetoric than an assembly of bankers and industrialists goes without saying. But the root of the matter, the need for ever broadening areas of mntual communication and, hopefolly, cooperation, is the same.

Given the existing disparitles among Communist countries and their ability to make themselves heard, such a conference need not inspire the fear and antagonism similar meetings once awakened. The world no longer contains two opposing blocs, plus a formless quantity of countries outside both of them. It has now a diversity that is great enough not to fear, and in fact so great as to need, more rather than less talking and action across national houndaries.

Newly designated as party leader and potential premier, Yitzhak Rabin, former army chief of staff and ambassador to tue United States, faces the subtle task of assembling a stable coalition among fractious interests. If he succeeds, his will be the government fated to carry the heavy responsibility of negotlating settlements with Israel's Arab neighbors.

A shaboy theater in Tel Aviv was the un- acrimony. Yet it was significant that his final opponent was as much a representative of a new generation as Mr. Rabin himself. Information Minister Shimon Peres emerged from the shadow or his longtime political meotor, Defense Minister Moshe Dayan, to assert a claim to leadership in his own right, and scored impressive strength across a fragmented party. Israel would henefit from a national leadership that included Mr. Peres's proven managerial and diplomatic skill alongside Mr. Rahin's.

Record Slumpflation

The economic performance of the United States in the first quarter of this year was almost certainly the most alarming of the entire postwar period. Real output declined at an annual rate of 5.8 percent, the sharpest drop in gross national product in 16 years. The over-all price level increased at an annual rate of 10.3 percent—the steepest climo in 23 years. Most disturbing of all. slump and inflation worsened in parallel. By an "index of economic disorder"-combining the rate of decline in real GNP with the rate of inflation-this slumpflation provides the poorest record since World War II put an end to the Great Depression.

The first quarter's dismai record cannot he dismissed as a fluke, a stroke of bad luck caused by the energy crisis. Unquestionably. the oil embargo ann soaring fuel prices did help to depress the economy and exacerbate inflation. The energy-cost squeeze has still not ended and could even intensify in the months ahead.

But the American economy had entered a slump even before the Mideast war broke out in October. Housing had fallen precipitously due to tight money and high interest rates. Analysts had hoped that a gradual slowing of the economy and lower interest rates would boost housing. Instead. accelerating inflation has raised rates to peak levels and housing is slumping again.

Inflation has also worsened the cash problems of many businesses, especially such heavy borrowers as the real estate investment trusts. Even with heavier carrying costs, business inventories are still rising. Since much juventory building was involuntary, such as the pile-up of unsold autos. production-depressing cuts in stocks appear of all.

Inflation is practically out of control. Nationally, U.S. consumer prices rose at an annual rate of 13.2 percent in March: in the New York area, the cost of living climbed at a 144 percent annual rate. Relentlessly. the administration goes on removing controls day by day, and Congress shows no disposition to design an effective new anti-inflation program to replace the shattered ruins of the existing one after April 30. The new temptation-sponsored, curiously enough, by libertarian economists-is to learn to live with inflation by imitating authoritarian Erazil and attaching all incomes and bonds to a price-index escalator. But, without waiting for the U.S. government to go Brazilian, American labor is producing an "indexing" solution of its own through an automatic tle of higher wages to higher prices. Understandable as labor's pressure is, the reality is that sharp rises in wages, far in excess of productivity gains, threaten either to intensify unfairnesses in the distribution of inflation-or to create a profit squeeze and deepen the recession.

The administration is apparently counting on a slowdown (which President Nixon has forbidden his underlings to call a recession) to check the inflation. At the same time. it is counting on a second-half recovery to keep unemployment from growing significantly. But what plans has the administration, if these wishful forecasts go awry?

Flying without flight plans or controls, the administration's top policy makers are jostling for the pilot's seat. Mr. Nixon has announced that he intends to take personal charge of "economic policy." "What policy?" one might well ask. On the record to date. this coold be the most disturbing news

Vietnam Peace Outlook: Bleak

By Gen. William C. Westmoreland

CHARLESTON, S. C.—For years, Vietnam was front-page news, a major political issue, and an emotional experience for the na-tion. Now this has changed: Casualties have been stopped, prisoners released and the controversy eclipsed by matters closer to home.

More than a year after the cease-fire, which many thought would bring peace to Vletnam, the country is still raveged by war, with the prospect of con-tinued bloodshed ahead. The cease-fire did bring about an end to U.S. military action, cause its 588 prisoners to be released, and set the stage for a truce in Laos. But little else has been accomplished.

During the last year, there have been more than 10,000 hostile cootacts and over 13,000 armed attacks resulting in the deaths of more than 33,000 Communists and 6,000 Sooth Vietnamese military men. Also, thera have been thousands of civilians killed, injured or abducted in the South.

Students of the situation are not surprised at the developments. I myself, in late 1972, wrote an article for The New York Times while the cease-fire discussions were going on but d'd not submit it because I thought it might muddle negotiations. I wrote:

"In my opinion, an early peace in Indochina is an illusion. And I also believe that a viable ceasefire is not a realistic prospect, particularly one supervised by a relatively small number of military representatives of four nations operating on the basis of unanimity."

Americans who drafted the cease-fire agreement were certainly aware that prospects for early peace were remote, but it was reasonable and timely to negotiate the United States out of Vletnam and let the Vietnamese fight it out among themselves. What concerned me was that by an agreement Americans would unduly restrict the ability of the South Vietnamese to protect their national interest.

Indeed, the cease-fire agreement was not entirely satisfactory to the leadership in Saigon. To their disadvantage, the North Vietnamese now occupy portions of South Vietnam, specifically in Quaog Tri Province, the mountainous areas to the west along the Lactian and Cambodian borders, and portions of the Mekong

Io geoeral, the Communists dominate territory that will only support persants with a primitive standard of living.

Price Paid

In this area, there are a greater number of North Vietnamese troops—over 150,000—than at the time of the cease-fire. They are deployed to defend the occupied territory but are also in a position to ottack. Such liabilities for the South Vietnamese were the price that our cease-fire negotiators believed had to be Haroi's objective is to dominate not only South Vietnam but all of Indochina. From its point of view, it is on a winning strategic track. The North Vietnamese have agreed to a truce in Lacs, the Communists dominate a major portion of that country and are a threat to the rest by political or military means.

There is reason for suspicion of the motives of the North Viet-namese in Lacs since they have 30,000 troops there, a number hardly necessary to protect the Ho Chi Minh Trail. The Communists have made great strides in Cambodia, and their timetable. and patience, may enable them to wear down the Cambodisas militarily god politically, so that one day the country will fall uoder their control, with Prince Norodom Siranouk reinstated as a figurebead. Of all of Indochina, South Vietnam is most important to the North Vietnamese, and their uitimate strategy is to break the South Vietnamese regime by disaffection it politically, bringing about popular weariness, end at an appropriate time establishing a military advantage.

Woereas during the war years Haool used propaganda, a great deal of which was generated in the United States from detractors of President Johnson's and President Nixon's Vietnam policies, Hanoi does not now enjoy that same advantage.

During the war years, the situation was like that of two poker players, one with his hand open to public view, the other with its entire length, enabling an ecemy to take sanctuary in nearhis hand cintched to his chest. countries. The Communists and the world knew what the United States was doing and its internal controversy was laid bare: Hanoi, on the contrary, operated in secrecy. This gave Hanoi a political advantage in the international arena and a psychological one with its people. It has now be-come fully apparent that Hanoi has large forces on South Vietnamese soil and its brazen efforts to portray these armies as

local dissidents have a hollow

The South Vietnamese, under President Nguyen Van Thieu, never have been deceived about the political character of the war and have made every effort to prepare the people in the South for the political struggle.

Backed by a large army and a capable navy and air force led by experienced officers, the South Vietnamese should be able to take care of themselves. They also have the military and practical advantage of internal lines of communication to support their deployed troops, lines that are short compared with those of Hanoi.

During U.S. involvement in South Vietnam, American policymakers underestimated the toughness of the North Vietnamese, but not so the leadership in Saigon. Drawing on long ex-perience, Mr. Thien and others reminded me constactly over the years that their enemies were a tough and tenacious people.

Mr. Thieu is the strongest and best-qualified man to lead his country during the current difficult period when military forces and a strong political base established, maintained and expanded. He has recently reshuffled his cabinet and brought into it two bright and capable men, Dr. Phan Quang Dan and Gen. Tran Van Don, as deputy premiers. This indicates that Mr. Thien is attempting to broaden the base of his government and to bring into it the best talent available regardless of frictions in the past, It is interesting that while in 1964 knowledgeable people would have taken no bets that the South Vistnamese government would be successful at the polis, now it is very clear that the non-Communists have an overwhelming majority, and even the most critical observers would give the Communists no more than 25 percent of a vote.

The North Vietnamese could indeed attack at any time to continue their efforts to accomplish their eods by military means, bot they have to weigh the risks involved. They are tenecious and may conclude that the United States is so precentied with its internal politics and energy problems that it would stand idly hy if they undertook another major Hanol, It is hoped, will realize that the conduct of the American people, as proved in history, is not that predictable. Odds are against a North Vietnamese military success.

There is a strong parallel between the situations in South Vietnam and in Korea. But the Vietnam situation has been far more complex because of a wellestablished guerrilla movement and political subversives in the South in addition to invading armies from the Nortic Further it is much simpler to defend a peninsula than to defend a country whose borders extend along

Watergate Abroad

The concern of Sen. James Buckley (IHT, March 21 and April 5) and other Americans about the effect of Watergate proceedings and impeachment of Nixon on our "image" abroad might be allayed by comments by concerned Iranians. One man said, "To us the Watergate investigations represent the essence of America for in no other place in the world would the corruption of the leaders be brought out like this." Another man said. "Congress must impeach and convict Nixoo and put him out of office; because if they do not, the world will have lost its model."

and the United States used air power against North Vietnam where it hurt.

Now, 20 years later, South Korea is independent, has a growing economy and is beginning to open communications with North Korea.

I believe Vletnam will follow a similar pattern. In due time, North Vietnam will probably accept the prevailing situation-two independent countries—and con-clude that it is to its interest to stop fighting and to coexist in peace. This could take years. But I would not rule out a peacefully unified Vietnam in the far distant future.

Beset with major economic roblems and faced with continning military costs, North and South Vietnam are in a difficult situation. North Vietnam is jeopardizing its vitality by persisting with its aggressive designs; South Vietnam is beginning to come of age. When North Vietnam will accommodate to reality is unknown, but it will come in

If Nixon Impeached

Some Tough Questions For Pollsters in U.S.

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON.—The professional public opinion analysts are worried about the propriety of their continuing to report on the voters attitudes toward President Nixon during his possible impeachment and trial.

In private conversations, some of the best-known of the polisters are asking for advice on their role during the period when judgment is being passed on the President. It is one of the most vexatious questions of professional and journalistic ethics they have ever faced, far exceeding the accustomed controversy over the impact of the public opinion polls on election campaigns and political careers.

Assuming (as most people here do now) that the House impeachment proceedings and the pos-sible Senate trial of Mr. Nixon will be carried by television into every home in the United States, the pollsters expect to be under heavy pressure from their newspaper clients to report the public reaction to every step in tha dramatic process.

Should They?

But they are asking—in dead earnest—whether such publication is in the public interest; whether they should do what they clearly have the capacity to do.

That capacity was amply demonstrated during the televised hearings of the Senate Watergate committee. The pollsters showed they can tell the senators how their constituents react to each of the successive witnesses. They can tell them who is believed and who disbelieved on each key point of testimony.

They can measure and quickly report back the public's reaction to prosecutors and defense lawyers and their tactics. They can gauge and describe the shifts in public opinion on the impeachment process itself, its pace and its tone. They can tell each representative and senator how his constituents are reacting-favorably or unfavorably-to his own part in the proceedings.

Most important of all-and most worrisome-they can report the public judgment on the in-nocence or guilt of the President and the desire to have him acquitted or impeached and con-

Worried

What worries them—as it ought to-is whether it is proper to un-leash this wealth of information on the men and women who must ultimately decide the President's fate or whether this kind of reporting may reduce the im-peachment and trial of Mr. Nixon to the level of mob rule symbolized by the Roman populace signaling the fate of a gladiator by

There is no easy answer for this one. The drafters of the U.S. Constitution clearly enviseed that impeachment would be both a judicial and political process. But Alexander Hamilton, in Federalist 65, after arguing that impeachment questions "are of a nature which may with peculiar propriety be denominated police. cal," conceded that "in such outes there will always be the greatest danger that the decision will be regulated more by the comparative strength of parties then by nocence or guilt." Hamilton resolved his own doubts by concloding that no place "else than in the Senate could have been found a tribunal sufficiently dignified, or suf-ficiently independent ... to preserve, unawed and uninfluenced, the necessary impartiality" to render judgment on impeachment the real demonstrations of in-

But Hamilton could not, of course, have foreseen the twin technological developments which make Mr. Nixon's possible impeachment and trial different from all others in American history: television which makes the whole country part of the courtroom; and survey research, which makes it possible to poll the national jury daily and report its findings to those who will decide the President's fate.

No one, so far as I know, is proposing that the House and Senate be sequestered during the impeachment and trial of the President. But how "unawed and uninfluenced" can the members of Congress be, facing election themselves immediately after the impeachment vote, if they are constantly made aware of what their constituents prefer them to Every personal and journalistic instincs of mine tells me that is is futile and foolish to contem-plate either a voluntary or a mandatory ban on the discentingtion of such an important category of information as polling data during the prolonged period of impeachment and trial.

No Ban

Most members of Congress have become sophisticated in the techniques of opinion measurement during their own campaigns, and there is obviously no way to prevent any or all of them from procuring reliable data from private polisters on their constituents views on the impeachment of the procedure. ment questions.

Bot the pollsters who regularly report their findings through the press are understandably worrled about the propriety of mundating the politician-jurors with opinion data that may prejudice or cloud their independent judgment of the evidence this would be welcome.

Love Affair Along the Nile

By C. L. Sulzberger

CAIRO—American secretaries of state have always had astonishing repercussions in Egyptian politics since the Nasserist revolution took power in 1952. A strong secretary. John Foster Dulles, frustrated the pro-American sympathies of Nasser himself, refusing to send him even modest amounts of arms, reneging on a promise to help build his high Nile dam and finally shoving him-with some bewilderment-into Russia's arms.

A weak secretary. William Rogers, frustrated the pro-American sympathies of Nasser's soc-cessor, Anwar Sadat, Sadat had never shown much liking for either Communism or the Soviet Union. Indeed, he had for years been fascinated by the United States. One of the two great personal influences he acknowledges is Lloyd Douzlas, the American writer, a set of whose complete works he possesses. The other great influence is the Calipb Omar, second in succession to the Prophet Mohammed.

When Rogers supposedly executed Nixon's foreign policy he only really ran its expression in the Middle East. The rest was elaborated by Nixon himself in tandem with his national security adviser, Henry Kissinger. The division of work, from Sadat's viewpoint, was lamentable.

Felt Deceired

When he succeeded Nasser, the present Egyptian President felt deceived by Rogers. He complained that every time the secretary "promised" something under his Middle East "peace plan" Rogers never followed through, Whether this argument was justifled or not, it had a deeply negative effect here. It is astonishing how completely this situation was cleared up after Kissinger first began to play an active (if behind-thescenes) role in Middle East affairs, ghove all when he took over as secretary of state and publicly dove in. Sadat, who is essentially a patriot without profound ideological prejudices, was impressed.

He has written about himself: "I have always distrusted theories and purely rational systems. I believe in the power of concrete facts and the realities of history and experience." He considers his Kissinger "experience" a "reality." The results, to use Sadat's words. have "succeeded in revolutionizing American policy in the Middle Kissinger has had a major influence on Sadat himself, on the Arab-Israeli deadlock, and on the entire U.S. Mediterranean position. To hegin with, the Jewish German-born architect of U.S. policy provoked extraordinary friendship and admiration in the Arah Sadat.

Kissinger Lauded

"You can trust Kissinger," he says. "He studies problems. He is loyal to American interests. And he is a strategist and a man of vision. He is a brilliant nego-tiator. He is flexible He always sees the main point. He can get his government to make decisions And he carries out his promises." Indeed, as far as Sadat is concerned. Kissinger confirms in him the conviction that-whatever he may be to his adversaries in American politics and American ethics-Richard Nixon is a paragon among American presidents. The Egyptian hopes to velcome his American peer here on an official visit and tell him in person, as he has already done by telephone, how much he values his "wise guidance." The result of a gradual change in relationships between Washington and Cairo finally produced, after Kissinger first got into Middla East affairs, the expulsion of 15,000 Soviet military technicians and instructors followed by last week's disclosure that Egypt will henceforth cease to rely on the Soviet Unioo as the source for all its modern

> Soviet Navy : announcement has been made confirming that America will move in as a supplier. Nevertheless, it is a reasonable guess that at least some Egyptian forces are going to have to start retraining in the future on how to use weapons made in the U.S.A. instead of the U.S.S.R.

That, in turn, could very well lead in the end to a reductionif not disappearance—of servicing facilities for Soviet naval resels in Egyptian ports and some day even to the dispatch of training groups from this country's milltary forces to America and of American instructors here.

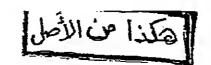

The road to peace in the Middle East remains long, pitted with deadfalls and booby traps, and sinuous with curves. Yet two things are already evident. The power balance in the Mediter-ranean shows signs of changing favorably for the United States. after many years of adversity And a new love affair is beginning to blossom along the Nile Valley.

Uncle Sam's battered ghost is now rising in the plump shape of Henry Kissinger. It's a good thing that-at Sadat's sugge -Henry is bringing his new bride to see the Sphinx when he re-visits Cairo next week.

Now would be the best time to make a fresh start toward more-- and better-public transponation while the need is still tresh in people's minds.

The Administration recently sent to Congress a new United Transportation Assistance Program, It would provide $16. billion for transportation over the next six years. Some of the money would go for increased aid to public transit. Trouble is: much of the program's funds would come from the reshurtling of separate existing programs. That could mean a tast shuffle for oublic fransportation.

We stulbelieve there's a better way. As we said in this space back in September, 1972, a good all-around transportation system "can be achieved only through a Handral Master Transportation Program. financed both by existing gasoline taxes that would go into the general coffers and by annual appropriations large enough to do the job."

By dealing with our transportation. troubles as closely related parts of a single problem, we could have an efficient, integrated transportation system at less cost than if we go about a piecemeal.

More and better public transport will go a long way toward unscrambling our transportation mess. And help to conserve our limited energy supplies in the bargain. As we like to remind people, just one rail line. can move three times as many passengers. as a inree-lane superhighway. With a bigsaving in fuel and money.

This kind of saving is needed now that the end of the oil embargo has given us a breather. We re going to need even greater sating in the future when many more Americans will be wanting to go places.

Quick. Name the fastest-growing energy company in America.

It's Tesoro Petroleum Corporation.

Surprised? Well, there's a lot about Tesoro that may surprise you.

For example, among the energy companies listed in Forbes Annual Report on American Industry, Tesoro is first in growth in sales and first in growth in earnings, and Tesoro is number one by far. For all industries, and among the 851 companies listed, Tesoro is 8th in growth in sales and 17th in growth in earnings.

A unique record of growth

During late 1973 and early 1974, virtually every company in the energy business set new earnings records. Tesoro was no exception, with net earnings of SI3.4 million for fiscal first quarter 1974, ending December 31, 1973—up from $4.4 million in the same period of 1973. Obviously, much of the industry's improved earnings came from improved prices for domestic and foreign crude oil production and for refined products. Nevertheless, Tesoro's first quarter earnings do not reflect the sharpest price increases for the company's foreign crude oil production, which occurred after the beginning of the second quarter.

But more important than earnings gains in any quarter is the fact that over the last seven years the compound growth rate of Tesoro's per share earnings has exceeded 30 percent per year. And for the past five years, return on total equity has averaged 19.9 percent.

How can a company perform like this?

In Tesoro's case, extraordinary performance begins with extraordinary management strengths. The company has a depth of management that extends beyond the top level executives. Tesoro's working Board of Directors is drawn from the petroleum. financial and industrial fields, rather than the usual "staff-type" board.

Since its founding ten years ago. Tesoro has been the only independent new energy company to achieve the status required to handle major undertakings on a world-wide scale. Because Tesoro is a young organization, it isn't bound by tradition as many other companies are. Because it is middlesized, it has the mobility to respond to opportunities more quickly than the giants of the industry. And Tesoro has the established banking connections, the strong capital structure and the listings on the New York, American, Pacific, Midwest, and London Stock Exchanges a growing energy company needs to attract capital funds for new growth opportunities.

Through the infusion of borrowed capital and as a result of Tesoro's policy of plowing back into the energy business all earnings from operations, except for a modest dividend, total assets have grown in almost a straight line—from slightly over $30 million in 1967 to well over $260 million today.

The latest example of a new area for growth and future major capital investments is the recent creation of a new division. Tesoro Coal Company. to participate in the expected growth of coal as a basic source of energy in the United States through the acquisition and development of important coal properties.

ready owns the largest crude oil refinery in the state, representing more than half of Alaska's total refining capacity, and markets gasoline through 75 owned or controlled service stations in Alaska. This latest expansion into Alaskan oil and gas exploration is in keeping with the breadth of Tesoro's world-wide operations.

Moving toward self-sufficiency

In North America, Tesoro produces crude oil and natural gas in nine states, including Texas, Oklahoma and California, and in Alberta and Saskatchewan. Canada. The company also owns an interest in major gas reserves north of the Arctic Circle on Melville and King Christian Islands, and is involved in exploration in the Gulf of Mexico offshore from Mississippi, Alabama and Florida. The resources of these areas and Alaska and the potential development of coal operations are expected to play an important role in helping America achieve the greater degree of self-sufficiency in energy we must have.

Tesoro engages in the retail marketing of gasoline in the contiguous United States, mainly in the Western states, through the high-volume stations of its wholly-owned subsidiary, Digas Company. In recent years, and more importantly in recent months, Digas sales have grown at an annual rate of about 25 percent despite nation-wide limitations on gasoline supply.

At work around the world

Although most of Tesoro's diversified operations are U.S.-based, the company also maintains large interests on three other continents. In Trinidad, Tesoro has worked since 1969 with the progressive Government of Trinidad and Tobago as co-owner of Trinidad Tesoro Petroleum Company Limited. This company produces about 42,000 barrels of crude oil and equivalent natural gas per day and its present budget provides increased funds for exploratory and development drilling both on and off-

In recent weeks, Dr. Eric Williams, Prime Minister of Trinidad and Tobago, and Tesoro have been discussing the construction of a sizeable crude oil refinery and downstream petrochemical complex in Trinidad. This is another example of the opportunities that arise when a young, energetic country and a young, energetic company work together for their mutual benefit. The company's continuing confidence in Trinidad and Tobago is based on the abundance of talent and natural resources there, and—from experience—on the unquestionable integrity and stability of the Trinidad Government, with whom Tesoro's relations are excellent.

Tesoro in Indonesia

Tesoro has major interests in oil-rich Indonesia. In Kalimantan, formerly called Borneo, the company is rehabilitating two separate areas—Tarakan Island and Sanga Sanga—that produced almost 400 million barrels of oil from depths of less than 2,500 feet before their destruction in World War II. Gross production of crude oil from these areas has been increased to 8,500 barrels per day, and further production gains are anticipated during the next year.

In Irian Jaya, Tesoro is associated in a productionsharing contract with Pertamina, the state-owned oil company of Indonesia. In this exploratory venture which covers 7½ million acres on and offshore, five exploratory wells have been drilled, and Tesoro is now evaluating all geological data pursuant to additional exploratory activity. In addition, Tesoro is attempting to bring in a partner to share in the possible future exploratory work in this area.

Sharp rises in the prices of low-sulphur Indonesian crude oil on world markets have generated greatly increased profits from Indonesian oil production. In response to pressure to provide more revenue for social and economic programs at home, Pertamina has renegotiated its production sharing contracts. Despite this fact, Tesoro continues to regard Indonesia favorably as a promising country in which to operate.

Tesoro in Europe

In the North Sea, Tesoro is a partner in two groups. One group, in which the company has a 22 percent interest, has bid for licenses to explore offshore from Norway. The other, in which Tesoro has a 25 percent interest, has acquired a 25 percent interest in 12 blocks (1.2 million acres) in the Dutch sector of the North Sea. Two exploratory wells are presently being drilled on this acreage. In addition, this group is negotiating for exploration licenses in offshore areas of the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Germany and Denmark.

Through its wholly-owned subsidiary, Tesoro Europe B.V., which is headquartered in the Hague, Tesoro also is active in the wholesale and retail marketing of petroleum products and coal on the Continent.

Petroleum related activities

A few short years ago, Tesoro had not yet entered the petroleum-service business. Today it is an expanding factor in that field, active in equipment rental and valve and pump manufacturing in more than 50 locations in the United States and overseas. Until several years ago, Tesoro was neither a crude oil-supplier nor a pipeline transporter. Today Tesoro is growing in both of these areas, as well as in the international crude oil trading area, serving the company itself and a host of outside customers.

Meeting the challenge of change

Change is the order of business in the energy industry, creating opportunities for the contemporary company with the willingness and ability to take advantage of opportunity. Tesoro Petroleum Corporation is exactly that kind of company.

So now you not only know which is the fastestgrowing energy company. You also know why.

If you'd like more information on America's fastest-growing energy company, ask for a copy of the Tesoro Annual Report. Write: Dr. Robert V. West, Jr., Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer, Tesoro Petroleum Corporation, 8700 Tesoro Drive, San Antonio, Texas 78286. Or Call: 512-828-8484.

Nestle Sees Sales Close to '73 Level

The Nestle group expects its 1974 sales and income growth rates to be close to the previous year's levels, chairman Pierre Lictard-Vegnt reports. Consisting of Nestle Alimentana SA. of Vevey, and Unilac Inc., of Panama Chy. the Nestle group had sales of 16.42 billion frants in 1973, up 4.1 percent from 1972, and e net income of 687 million francs, up 5.4 percent from the previous year. Speaking at a press conference. Mr. Liotard-Vogt pointed out that the energy situation and fluctuating exchange rates are making predictions increasingly difficult. Calculated at 1972 exchange rates, the group's 1573 net income would have been 15 percent above tile previous year's level, he said.

Oil Price Rise Said Possible

NEW YORK, April 23 IAP-DJ). — A representative of a leading member of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) said today industrial nations face more oil price increases unless they "Curtail their galloping inflation." Jamshid Amouzegar, the Iranion Finance Minister, said oil prices will remain at their present level until October, but li industrial prices continue rising, he said, oil producers will then demand "something to take care of inflation in order to keep the purchasing power" attained with recent oil price increases.

However, "there should he no more geometric price increases from now on." Mr. Amouzegar told the United Nations Cor-respondents Association. Further changes in the oil price, he said, would aim at keeping it comparable to the cost of other sources of energy, such as atomic

Mr. Amouzegar said proper oil price levels should promote de-velopment of atomic energy 'in a wise manner, with proper attention to safety measures."

DEATH, SLEEP AND THE TRAVELER By John Hawkes. New Directions. 179 pp. $6.95.

ed my worst fears about the book. Speculating on his given name, which is Allert, the Dutch narrator writes: "But in Dutch and despite the accent on the first syllable, my name is clearly a repository for the English word alert, as if the name is a 1,000year-old clay receptacle with paranois curled in the shape of a child's skeleton inside." On page 17, describing the sun setting on a house and a car parked outside it. he writes: "The setting sun was licking the hard bright machine like some great invisible beast on its knees." On page 26, he informs us that "the thought of salt water is unbearable to Observing, not for the firt time, a friend's white meerschaum pipe, he says: ". . . the little round white bowl of his pipe reminded me of the gonad of some child god..." When he unpacks his valise, it has this effect on him: "I felt as if I had violated the coffin of some unknown child." If I'd had any doubts concerning the nature of Mr. Hawkes's writing, the penultimate sentence in this novel would have dispelled it: "I shall dream of she who guided me to the end of the journey, whoever she is, and I shall think of porridge leeks, to-bacco, white clay and water coursing through a Roman aque-

It would not be surprising to read these lines in a parody of B certain school of modern writing, but the author is serious. And he has a considerable reputation to give weight to his seriousness: On the publication of his last novel, "The Blood Oranges," a critic characterized him, on the front page of The New York Times Book Review, as "feasibly, our best writer," and went on to praise his "relentless originality." With all due respect to "The Blood Oranges," I think this new novel might, feasibly, be defined as remorseless, rather than relentless, in its originality.

"Death, Sleep and the Traveler" would not be worth all this fuss if it were not symptomatic of a growing trend in American fiction. This trend is perfectly, if inadvertently, described by the author himself, in the guise of a rash that appears on Allert's body. It begins, significantly, around his navel and slowly spreads, until it totally envelops his bulging erogenous center.

At first it is "pebbled" in tex-ture, like "the flesh of the pink-lipped strawberry." Then - it changes, until it is "thicker than skin... smooth, velvety... glistening and moist with its own secretion." No reason is given for the introduction of this unpleasant rash, nor does it play any part in the action of the book. And of course Allert never thinks of having it treated, any more than our rash of new "symbolist"

On page three of "Death, Sleep novelists would think of questioning their own glistening and moist secretions. tioning their own glistening and

What do I mean by a "symbolist" novel?

Well, in my unflattering usage it is a novel in which nothing is natural, in which everything sounds laboriously thought up or out and means both more than meets the eye and less than meets the mind. The authors of such novels are wholesalers of forced correspondences. - Each thing must resemble some other thing-the unlikelier the betterthereby illustrating the dread mystical omnipresence of metaphor. Conversations are humdrum conundrums: "...which of us would dare deny the schizophrenic his possibilities for romantic behavior?" "What do you think of my theory that a man remains B virgin until he commits murder?" Characters in such novels are "clay receptacles with para-nois curled in the shape of a child's skeleton inside."

In "Death, Sleep and Traveler," Allert has been sent alone on a cruise by his wife. Her motive in this, as in everything, is obscure enough to offer us the thrill of conjecture. A fat, middle-aged Dutchman, Ailert bears a remarkable resem-hlance to Sidney Greenstreet in the old Eric Ambler or Dashiell Hammett movies. The same stilted polysyllabes, the tone of voice both pedantic and svuncular. A school teacher manqué ac-cent, posing as a villain and a dirty old man. On his voyage, he eleeps with a "child," the same one, I suppose, who is curled in the clay receptacle and whose coffin he had violated.

From the ship, Allert shuttles back and forth in time-out, out damped chronology! to sleep or to chat with his wife back at the ranch, He also tells of his dreams and watches his psychiatrist friend substitute for him in her arms, powerless to resist the in-cluctable laws of polymorphous perversity.

Though we see them from every anatomical angle, neither Allert's wife nor his "child" mistress ever solidifies into anything so mundane as a recogniz-able person. In one of his plays, a Noel Coward character says "a woman should be struck regularly, like a gong," and this is pretty much the role of Mr. Hawkes's women: From time to time. Allert impinges on them in his inimitable way, and they emit a hollow

It is rather touching to see how vulnerable pretentious novels arc; how they thrust weapons into our hands. Again and again in "Death, Sleep and the Traveler I came across sentences that were naked as cries uttered by theauthor in his sleep, lines that should never have seen the light of day. But we are in the human condition together, and we must try to be kind. And so the sentence I have chosen to sum up this book is by no means the worst I could find. Let us call it a gentle reproof. Allert is talking about soup, but his pronunciamento applies more aptly to his own humbering progress. This con-somme," he says, "has been siphoned from the backs of lumbering tortoises whose pathetic shells have been drilled for the tubes." Listen to that acrtence, Mr. Hawkes, and consider.

Looking just at the North-South hands on the diagramed deal, it is clear that a declarer in four hearts should pray that the opponents should forget to lead spades. As it happens, the spade lead is obvious if South is the declarer, less obvious if North is the declarer.

But as it happens the spads lead turns out to help the declarer. So it might seem that the partnership that played four hearts from the South side was due for a profit. But everything was topsy-turvy.

North-South used a transfer sequence as shown North's response of two diamonds promised at least five cards in hearts. When he followed with three notrump, he showed 5-3-3-2 distribution and left the final decision to South.

The effect was rather like a response of three hearts to one no-trump in standard methods, except that South became the declarer. He might have passed three no-trump, a decision that would have turned out well, but fearing the spade suit he reverted to a heart game. The obvious lead was a spade, but West made the inspired lead of the club jack.

The declarer happily won the first trick with the club ace and played three rounds of diamonds, discarding a spade from dummy. He felt less happy, and less welldisposed toward West, when East ruffed the third round of dismonds. A shift to spades gave West two spade tricks, and the diamond jack was led East over-ruffed the dummy for down one. In the replay North became the declarer in the same contract. He was not pleased when East hit on a low spade lead, but cheered up when West took two spade tricks and shifted to clubs.

It was now clear that the spades were blocked. North won in his hand and took the heart finesse confidently. If it had lost, he would have been safe, and as it was he made 11 tricks for a score

By Thomas Rogers NEW YORK, April 23 (NYT). -John Havlicek has been tormenting the New York Knickscspecially in playoff games-for many years, so it was no sur-prise that the Boston Celtics captain was the driving force in his team's 98-91 victory at Madison Square Garden Sunday.

The 34-year-old exponent of perpetual motion scored 36 points and drove to the hoop for the crucial basket with just 26 seconds to play. As a result of bis beroics, the Celtics now hold a 3-I lead in the four-of-seven-game series for the championship of the National Basketball Association's Eastern Conference. They will have an opportunity to wrap up the crow, tomorrow night at Boston Garden. Havlicek has scored 2,963 points in 129 playoff games.

Jerry West, Elgin Baylor and Wilt Chamberlain have pited up more in playoff com-The strange thing is that Harlicek began his career with Boston 12 years ago as a defensive specialist.

"I learned about defense in college," be said after Sunday's victory. "Coac's Fred Taylor had five guys at Obio State who averaged more than 30 points in high school, so he needed a defeusive forward. That was me.

"I became aware that movement is the most important thing on offense. If I keep moving, the defensive man is going to have to work harder. If you keep in constant movement, something is going to happen, even if you run without purpose. You run to create situations."

Opinion: New Leagues Help Eliminate Reserve Clause

By Larry Fleisher

NEW YORK.-The erection of professional aporta leagues has produced an intriguing side offert -the potential for the climinaoption clauses in all sports.

These clauses basically bind a player to his team forever. Different people have different feelings about these resirietions.

But certainly all sports fons have had to think twice about the World Football League raid on established players from the National Football League, about last year's heetic activity by the World Hockey Association in signing National Hockey League stars. about last Wednesday's drait by the American Basketball Association of some 50 National Basketball Association players, about the recent' announcement ci a group of things: . Do I buy season tickets for the New York Football Stars so that I am not shut out as I 753 with the Jets or the Gianta?

· Does watching the Chicago Black Hawks, with Bobby Huli missing, change my enthusiasm for the came? Are the Carchina Cougars going to "steal" Henry Biob; and

Peter Maravich? Will the taleof be so thinnen. out by the new leagues that the teams will not be on as high a competitive level as in the past? All of these questions are antirlpated with the start of new leagues. But the underlying important question from the players' point of view is: "Will this desire on the part of a number of businessmen to own franchises finally and effecthicky remove the reserve clause or option clauses or both from professional team sports?"

There is no question that the advent of the ABA, with competiiton between two leagues for college stars, has resulted in a much higher salary level in professional basketball than ever before. The ability of the players to forestand a merger by obtaining a court injunction and then by presenting their case forcefully in Congress to prevent anti-trust exemption

Nancy Kissinger: Greta Garbo of U.S. Wives

By Meg Creenfield and Katharine Graham

WASHINGTON (WP).—Nancy Maginnes Rissinger is known as the Greta Garbo of U.S. cabinet wives, an aloof presence when reporters are about-or even better, if she can manage it, an aloof absence.

In a relaxed two-hour interview the other day, the 39-yearoln wife of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger spoke often and with conviction of the importance of privacy in her life. But she is reconciled to the celebrity of her husband-even though she says, "I'm always somewhat surprised by it"-and claims that the press who were said to have dogged the newlywed Kissingers on their recent Mexican honeymoon "couldn't have been nicer."

In Mrs. Kissinger's view, her husband is no more enamored of international stardom than she. "Henry could live without the celebrity," she says. "What he couldn't live without is a job that stimulated him." Nancy Kissinger feels pretty much the same way herself. She intends to continue her work as a top aide to former Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York on a national priorities study group and also to complete B dissertation for ner doctoral degree in history. She hopes as well to Secompany her husband on his frequent global travels. "If I did not travel." she observes, "it would be cutting out so much of him personally-it would be inviting disaster."

The picture that emerges of their marriage is one of Mr. Kissinger encouraging his intellectual and independent bride to pursue the interests that have dominated her career since she was graduated from Mount Holyoke college in 1955. Nancy Kissinger says that her husband wants her to get back to work on her doctoral dissertation because he believes she will not be happy until she has finished it, and that he approves her continuing to hold down a job with Nelson Rockefeller. She adds that so far as potential conflict or embarrassment over her continuing to work is concerned, they both helieve that since she is not privy to classified information he deals with or to great government secrets, there should be no problem.

Does the secretary then not discuss the business of the day with her? "Henry and I don't discuss current events as much as we discuss historical events. When he's finished for the day, he doesn't want to talk about those things." Mrs. Kissinger suddenly smiles, as if aware that she may he being a hit pre-"Of course," she says, "we've only been married three

In those three weeks certain patterns have been established however, and one is that impossible demands will not be leveled by either on the other's independence, freedom of action, or accustomed life style. The secretary's wife is, by her own description, a "night person" who "never goes to bed until two or three in the morning." She retires after her husband does and generally gets up later too. But he evidently does not want or expect his wife to be a hovering attendant or handmaiden. And Nancy Kissinger can't imagine him asking her, say, where his socks are. "Henry doesn't even expect me to know where they are," she says, adding, "He couldn't care less if I do. I did say yesterday. Shouldn't I fix your breakfast—you know, a sort of bousewifely thing—and be said, 'Why?'

The new Mrs. Kissinger, by her own account, has spent most of her life in the company of men who took her intellectual accomplishments and capacities seriously and who did not regard her as "a little girl who could only paint flowers." She speaks admiringly in this connection of her employer of meny years. Gov. Rockefeller, but the remark itself reaches back to B happy childhood on a 20-acre estate in White Plains, N.Y., overrun with 29 cets belonging to her, a host of farm animals and her horse. There she was the only girl in a family of two brothers and numerous male cousins. Her father, whom she describes as "a sort of Rousseau-ish figure," and most of her relatives were keenly interested in history and philosophy if they were not in fact professionally involved in these fields. "I never had any sense of not being treated intellectually the same as my brothers," she observes. "If I'd been one of those adorable cute little girls, maybe I'd have been treated like one."

Mrs. Kissinger speaks often and affectionately of her family and also of childhood school friends who remain among her "closest" friends today. She in fact attributes her lack of self-consciousness over her height—she is about 6 feet tall—to the particular environment of the school she attended. "It was a very gentle place," she says. "I had no great feeling I was growing so tall. There was no competition for clothes or dates. By the time I went to college, my brothers' friends were all 6 feet tall. So it was all right."

Mrs. Klasinger speaks feelingly of having a strong "sense of roots" as the daughter of wealthy, church-going Episcopalians. When the subject is introduced of the tensions that might attend her marriage to a man of so different a background-Mr. Kissinger is the son of Jewish immigrants from Germanyshe speaks with ease and candor. "I feel strongly, oddly enough." she says, "that people with the same religious background are better off together. Theoretically at least, if not always in practice, they share the same sense of values. If either Renry or I were religious fanatics it would have been different."

But although she is a fairly regular churchgoer, she does not believe that their marriage will be in any way harmed by their difference of religions. Their families? Mrs. Kissinger concedes that probably both sides would have preferred it if they had married within their own religions, but says there were really no very strong feelings on the matter.

Family members on both sides in fact did attend the hastly called and highly private ceremony—but not, Mrs. Kissinger amiably reveals—because her new husband was particularly foresighted. When they decided to marry they also decided to inform their respective families. "So I told my family and Henry told his family." says Mrs. Kissinger—"or at least I assumed he did." She ponders the matter: "Actually, I think he thought he'd told them. Then on the night before the ceremony I said, 'Well you did tell your family, didn't you?' And he said a sort of dubious 'yes' and went off and got on the phone." Even with the last-minute notice, Kissinger's brother and sister-in-law and his two children were able to attend.

10 Years Ago

Mrs. Kissinger met her husband-to-be while she was working for Rockefeller more than 10 years ago and once got him to speak to B graduate seminar she was running at the University of California at Berkeley on his return from a trip to Vietnam. She began to work for him in 1968 and has a very clear view of his personality as an employer. She discounts the stories of his terrible temper on the basis of her own experience: "It isn't such a terrible temper. If he thinks you're good he'll work you to the ground. If he thinks you're not good he'll never bother you. When he gets mad, it's over some little thing."

What brought the world's longest secret engagement to marriage? Why now? Mrs. Kissinger has obviously answered the question in her own mind: "It's just a function of personality. I never do anything quickly. I really am one of those people who take a long time to decide. Even when I see a dress I like I try it on and then go home and think about it and then go back and look at it again. Henry is different. He makes decisions quickly. But we just reached that point in both our lives when we decided to get married. You learn about yourself. You have to accept the fact that you go your own pace. And you go along with what you're comfortable with. Henry decides more quickly."

Indeed at a birthday dinner for Mrs. Kissinger the other evening, her husband said in a toast: "All of you Episcopalians who have been picking on me so long, I want you to know if I had my way we would have been married three years Bgo." Now that they are married, Mrs. Kissinger is aware that she will have special diplomatic duties, more formal and official than those that would have fallen to her before her husband was sworn in as secretary of state—a ceremony Mrs. Kissinger says her husband refers to as his Bar Mitzvah.

"If I'd been younger it would have been harder—it would have been a cultural shock," she says. For the moment there is no strain. "So far no one has said a word to me" about official duties, she notes . . . "and I'm grateful for it. It's been very relaxed." Nor does she believe the move to Washington, meaning not just the place but the life that is generated by her husband's position and activities, has been very difficult. "I'm lucky because I know people," she says, referring to her frequent visits here. "I can get friends to help, from finding a butcher to finding a house.

In fact the day before she was interviewed, Mrs. Kissinger had been house hunting for a place to rent and she had seen 11 houses two of which were on her "maybe" list. She was appalled by the cost of everything and also by the fact that the owners wanted to sell and not to rent. She is looking, she says, for "something sort of sunny and open and"-once again-"with a sense of privacy, room for every member of the family to seal himself off." Mrs. Kissinger is very fond of her husband's children by his previous marriage, speaking with great enthusiasm of their sensitivity, brightness and charm, and she clearly wants them to visit.

Invariably then, one comes back to privacy—privacy versus the accountement of fame, privacy to sustain the relationship that has managed to flourish under such strange conditions and which Mrs. Kissinger has every expectation will flourish under the new pressures of life married to the world's most famous and celebrated international politician.

The fame, she says, "is sort of irrelevant. The celebrity—that's not the person you live with," She seems confident that she can tread the fine line between being active in the world that interests him and yet respecting his privacy, between being wife and being intellectual companion and equal, between official and unofficial roles. She would, she says, love to be on Mr. Kissinger's staff or go off on one of his negotiating teams, but she is fully aware that that would be impossible,

Martha Mitchell Theorie On Husband's Departur

Martha Mitchell, estranged wife of former Attorney General John Mitchell, thinks she may know why her hosband walked out on her and why she is not being allowed to see their 13year-old daughter Marty. "If Mitchell thought he was going to be in serious trouble," she said, "he may have thought, that the best way to deal with this woman who had loved him so long was to make her hate him." She was in Los Angeles for a taping session for a May 1 "Tomorrow" show, to be telecast by "The John Mitchell I knew.

the Richard Nixon I knew, no longer live," Mrs. Mitchell told Michael Selier of the Los Angeles Times. "They killed themselves with power and money, maybe." Not that she was ever a big Nixon supporter. "I never voted for Richard Nixon," she said. "In 1972 there wasn't any place I could vote. In 1968, I didn't like

Mrs. Mitchell went on to say that she has not only tried to see her daughter, but also her hus-band. Ent "The hotel Im New York] moves him to a new suite every week... and changes his name [in the register]. Ke left me with $945... It's very difficult to get my bilis paid. Cass (Mama) Elliott, 32, for-merly with the Mamas and Papas singing group, collapsed in a California TV studio Monday night just before she was to appear on the "Tonight" show. An NBC network spokesman said that the incident was apparently due to exhaustion, brought on hy a recent singing tour. Miss Elliott was taken by ambulance to Cedars of Lebanon Hospital and treated there as an outpatient. .

Former Vice-President Spire Agnew has already been assured of more than $300,000 for his novel and could realize more than $1 million on it, his agent said Monday. Scott Meredith said that Agnew will visit England to promote his book, "A Very Special Relationship," probably at the heginning of next year. Meredith, who issues periodic reports on new contracts for the book, sticks to generalities. He
